

Wet & Dry Foundation

as seen on www.beautyheaven.com.au

Enhance^{NC}
BY
NATURAL COMPATIBLES

Beauty blog

A matte mug, naturally

13 Apr 2011 17:36 PM | Posted by bh'sOlivia

Okay beauties, it's time to get honest.

For a long time, the only way I felt totally certain of achieving a flawless face was when I used a very expensive brand. Whenever I had run out of this powder, I'd feel as though my face just wasn't up to scratch – you know, wasn't as pristine and matte and as lovely as it could be.

Then, without warning, Natural Compatibles Wet & Dry Foundation landed on my desk. I almost didn't try it, I saw no real reason to – until of course I realised I was just about out of aforementioned exxy powder (and my bank balance definitely wasn't going to allow a refill anytime soon).

So I took a chance. I tried this new powder – which is enriched with minerals and emollients and can be applied wet or dry, depending on how much coverage is desired – and which claims to deliver a smooth, matte finish that will last all day.

I have to tell you, I haven't been so impressed with a new product in quite a while. It's now my handbag staple (check out the shot of me and a rather erm... well used Natural Compatibles compact) and I am constantly returning to this little beauty when touch-ups are in order.

I ← find it gives me my desired coverage when used dry, but if you're after a bit more, a handy hint is to lightly wet your sponge and apply it damp. It glides on like velvet, cleverly disguising fine lines and imperfections in the process.

So if you're after a natural looking, matte-finish complexion, well, I think I've just saved you a lot of pre-purchase hassle haven't I beauties?